TERRORISM CHARGES DENIED

Court Trial for Dr. Townsend Looms as Result of Walkout

Speaker Burns Says Pension Leader's Act Is Case of Contempt

TOWNSEND IS ANGRY

Says He Will Not Testify Again Except Under Arrest

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Prospects of a court trial for Dr. F. E. Townsend for defiance of the house investigating committee shared interest in new difficulties over tax legislation Friday.

Speaker Byrnes called the pension leader's walkout a plain case of contempt and expressed belief that the case would be referred to the United States Attorney's office.

The senate finance committee Friday agreed to reconsider the day-old compromise plan on taxing corporations.

Quits House Probers

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Dr. F. E. Townsend, co-author of the $200-a-month old-age pension plan, walked out on the special house committee investigating his plan Thursday.

Appearing before the committee an hour later, Dr. Townsend announced the committee as "unfair and unfriendly" and announced that he would testify no more "unless under arrest."

Then he walked out while some of the spectators shouted "stop him" and "shut the door."

The committee cleared the room and at a closed session, adopted a resolution recommending that the House cite Townsend on a contempt charge.

When he was called to take the witness stand, Townsend, voice, blinking, asked permission to read a statement. It was refused.

"In view of the apparent unfriendly attitude of this committee and the unfair attitude it has shown to me and the members of my organization, I deem it my duty to say that I shall no longer attend these committee hearings."

"I am retiring from this sort of inquisition and I do not propose to come back again except under arrest and I refuse to make any further statements concerning this movement to the committee."

Then clapping his sailor straw hat on his head, Townsend took a look at the committee and said:

"Thank you gentlemen, and goodbye."

Dr. Womack Talks to Hope Rotarians

Henderson President Urges Importance of Maintaining Faith

Faith, and the courage it gives a man to "carry on," whether in the spiritual or practical world, was the topic of an address by Dr. J. P. Womack, president of Henderson State Teachers college, Arkadelphia, before Hope Rotary club Friday noon in Hotel Barlow.

Dr. Womack said that America is passing through times which try men's faith, the most damaging fact in an educator's eyes being this—that about half of the nation's unemployed, 5 million or more, are youths, finished with school, but still under 21. It takes faith, the college president said, to believe that economic affairs will recover sufficiently to give these young folks a fair chance—but America has never yet failed them.

Dr. Womack was presented on a program arranged by Foy Hammons.

Pilot Saves Girl From Death Leap

10,000 Feet Above Boston Girl Trys Suicide Attempt

BOSTON—(AP)—In a plane high above Boston harbor Thursday, Charles W. Southerland, veteran pilot, fought with a young woman and finally prevented her from jumping to her death.

Fifteen minutes later he made a perfect landing at East Boston airport bringing his passenger back alive. As he landed he has half-standing in the open cockpit.

He guided the plane with his left hand. With his right he clutched the chestnut hair of the attractive and smartly-dressed woman who was struggling desperately to get away.

Thursday night the young woman, about 22, was under guard in Boston Psychopathic hospital. Still weeping, she refused to reveal her identity. At police headquarters her only answer to "just give me a gun."

Southerland, 29, pilot for Inter-city Airlines said his passenger, seated in the rear cockpit of the light biplane, had acted "sort of queer as we were flying over Boston harbor at an altitude of 10,000 feet, above the clouds."

Later he glanced around.

"The girl was almost all out of the plane," he continued. "She had one leg on the wing, the other just inside the cockpit."

"I fastened my safety belt, reached back and grabbed her by the hair and threw her back into the plane."

The pilot, a six-footer weighing more than 200 pounds, said the slightly-built girl struggled to get free. "She swished my fingers and scratched," he said. "She fought like a wildcat."

"The ship went out of control several times. Once, as I dipped, I was almost thrown out."

"I threw the ship into a speed turn and got a chance to change hands. Then we headed back toward the airport, five miles away. The air was humpy and we were flying against a headwind."

Airport attaches held the girl until police arrived.

Cocaine is obtained from a low-growing shrub, the vivid green leaves of which are gathered and dried in the sun, just as are tea leaves.

Heels dug into the turf, every ounce of weight and strength thrown against the land thies, the ground crew strains every muscle to the tensely critical task of mooring the huge dirigible Hindenburg on arrival at Lakehurst, N. J., after a perilous voyage across the Atlantic on its second commercial trip to the United States. The high wind pressing against the 800-foot side of the dirigible, threatened to tear it away from sailors in the ground crew.

Officials Silent On Tax Reduction

Futrell and McDonald Defer Comment on Smith's Plan

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—Governor Futrell and Secretary of State Ed F. McDonald, chairman and secretary of the state refunding board, declined comment Thursday on a proposal of Comptroller Griffin Smith for reducing the state gasoline tax by a quarter of a cent per gallon.

"I haven't looked into the question," the governor said.

Smith said the refunding board had the authority to make the reduction under act 51 of the refunding act, suggesting that highway revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30 would exceed the $10,000,000 required by the 1934 refunding law.

The comptroller reported that actual and estimated revenues to be credited to the state highway fund during the present fiscal year will be $10,500,000.

The act provides that only half the amount of reduction found possible shall be discontinued and the other half, or one-fourth cent, shall be collected and allotted to the county highway turnback fund. Smith wrote the governor and other refunding board members.

He stated that under the suggested reduction, the county highway fund would show a net turnback of $215,000 instead of $620,000 at present, with a saving to taxpayers of $325,000.

Arkansas has a 6 1/2 cent gasoline tax, which Smith said will produce about $8,400,000. Remainder of the estimated $10,500,000 will come from automobile license fees and other sources.

Original historical manuscripts have been purchased from two authorities on southwest Arkansas history.

Randolph P. Hamby, mayor of Prescott, is writing the story of Nevada county and Prescott, including the legendary history of the famed outlaw Nick Trammel, who kept a bloody tavern on Terre Rouge creek.

Other special articles will be prepared on the river and railroad history of Fulton, the old fortifications near Dooley's Ferry, below Spring Hill—and there will be historical data on practically every community in the southwest Arkansas area.

The Star has photographed with its new Graflex press camera about 20 subjects, up to Friday, and will take three times that many for the complete edition.

Bits of local history and old photographs are particularly wanted by the newspaper.

Officers, Planters in Retort to Eddy's Strike Statements

Vigorous Protest Lodged Over Cotton Chopper's Strike

ASK INVESTIGATION

Strike Leaders Call On Department of Justice to Probe Condition

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(AP)—Plantation owners and officers of three East Arkansas counties vigorously denied charges Friday by Dr. Sherwood Eddy that terrorism was rampant in the cotton chopper's strike in this area.

Dr. Eddy, en route to New York after an investigation of conditions in the cotton fields, said there was "slavery in Arkansas," and that a "reign of terror" existed.

H. L. Mitchell, secretary of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, telegraphed Attorney General Cummings, asking that the Department of Justice investigate conditions of "peonage" or "forced labor."

He also telegraphed Secretary of Labor Perkins, asking her to "attempt mediation."

Arkansas Labor Commissioner McKinley said that planters had refused an offer from his department to mediate the strike.

He said that President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, had been asked to use his influence in obtaining an investigation by the Department of Justice.

Walkout Is Denied

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(AP)—East Arkansas planters scoffed Thursday at strike leaders' claims of a wholesale walkout of cotton choppers in three counties.

"Most planters agreed that the walkout of the cotton choppers had not been felt to any extent," H. L. Mitchell, secretary of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, sponsors of the strike said that 3,000 laborers had left the fields.

R. W. Minnie, who operates three plantations around Parkin, said the strike "hasn't gained a foothold in this vicinity," and "our only knowledge of it is gained from reports that handbills are being distributed outside the county."

"My own sharecroppers and day laborers appear to be satisfied," he said, adding that the strike was hard on workers and planters alike.

"Most planters take care of their labor during seasons when there is no work for them to do," he said. "Many of them could be displaced. When the mechanical cotton pickers are perfected at least 40 per cent of the present labor could be displaced. Farmers are not anxious to discharge their labor."

Minnie and other farmers blamed "outside influences" for the strike. Sheriff Howard Curdin of Marion and other officers said that strike organizers were attempting to force labor from the farms through threats.

Auto Overturns, Driver Is Killed

Your Baby's Health

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

The nursing mother must keep herself in good physical condition and eat proper food. Her diet has been described in previous articles. To maintain good physical condition, she must have plenty of sleep and some exercise in the open air.

Worry and mental strain, as has already been mentioned, may affect the quantity and nature of the milk secretion. If the mother does not have enough milk, the baby remains hungry and gets fretful.

In that case, the mother gets less rest and becomes more worried. As a result, she has less milk. It is a vicious circle.

The size of the breast and the size of the weight of the mother do not seem to be of great importance in relation to the amount of milk that the mother can produce.

It is not possible for anyone to say, before the baby is born and the mother actually starts to secrete milk, whether any woman will be able to nurse her baby. However, any competent doctor can tell the mother after the baby is born whether she has enough milk to supply the baby with his necessary food.

Women with active tuberculosis, or one who has had the disease in any form, should not nurse a baby. The disease, she will expose the baby to infection, and the added strain on her body will lower her resistance to disease.

Whenever a woman has severe complications after childbirth, such as hemorrhage, infection, or convulsions, she should not nurse her baby. After she has recovered, the doctor may determine whether she can resume nursing, but it is advisable to be cautious in permitting nursing of the baby after the mother has had any fever, signs of infection, or toxemia.

If the breasts of the mother become infected, it is customary to discontinue nursing until the condition has definitely healed.

If the baby develops vomiting or colic, or fails to gain weight, the mother should not stop nursing. She should, instead, find out from the doctor whether she is feeding the baby often enough, or too often.

Her diet should be surveyed, and the doctor should determine whether the baby ought to have extra food in addition to what she can give him.

If the mother is suffering from any chronic disease, such as inflammation of the kidneys, heart disease, or cancer, she certainly should not nurse the baby. Indeed, if she is delicate, the doctor should determine whether nursing will do her harm and whether it will be of any benefit to the child.

Physicians generally believe that mothers are more likely to nurse their first and second babies satisfactorily than they are to nurse later ones. In other words, the ability to nurse the baby tends to diminish with each successive child.

right on the matter in question and the mother should be sure. If the risk is too great, then the children are too young or the playground wrong.

Acquire Judgment
Age has everything to do with it. We know that a child of two can understand very little about warnings.

At five, he may understand certain things, but not others. At seven or eight when he is able to see reasons he is far more likely to be careful because he adds judgment to orders.

But all children are experimental at any age. And of course, the mother seldom knows exactly what they will do next.

This is where the trouble lies. Her protective instinct, removed from mere nervousness, urges her presence. She knows what a terrible teacher experience can be. Yet the child won't learn self-defense thoroughly until a few bumps and bruises come along to teach him. The caution that develops by words from his mother may be a pseudo affair unrelated to real life. This is not caution at all, but inhibition. And life goes pretty flat if one grows up on a little island so surrounded.

Let Character Grow
Small children should have some older person near if possible. Those a little older may be trusted in a safe place. And so on up the line. Physical protection is wise, but at the same time, they should be learning wisdom on their own. Too much interference is a weakening process. Character development is pretty much the same.

The young person too insistently supervised instead of acting and thinking for himself is slow to mature, and indeed many people stay babies forever.

le, about as good a mystery as you will ever read anywhere; "Green Ice," by Raoul Whitfield, a very good example of the hard-boiled gangster mystery; and "The Middle Temple Murder," by J. S. Fletcher, a workmanlike specimen of the melodramatic British school. Altogether, a swell two books' worth of reading matter.

Lastly, we come to "The Desert Lake Mystery," by Kay Cleaver Strahan (Bobbs-Merrill $2). This yarn, which takes itself very seriously, has to do with murders and mysterious disappearances on a Nevada ranch. It is suitably puzzling, but suffers slightly from that over-the-top murder stories that try to be literary.

Gail arrives there just after tea.

Now go on with the story CHAPTER III

"I've no time to talk to anyone just now," declared Miss Carolle. "If you want to see me about a position you'll have to come in the morning."

"Oh," exclaimed Gail. "I'm sorry I've interrupted you. It was Madame Lizette I really wished to see."

"Madame Lizette? You're a friend of hers?" Miss Carolle rose quickly.

"No, I'm a designer. I'm looking for a job, and someone in the showroom told me I'd have to see you, but I didn't know you saw people only in the mornings."

"Well, that's our rule, but—" Miss Carolle laughed. "Won't you sit down? You've come in at the psychological moment, for I'm just preparing an advertisement for a designer. Before I send it down, perhaps you'll show me some of your work."

"Of course I will." Quickly Gail untied the portfolio she was carrying and drew out her sketches.

"Oh, that's beautiful!" the older woman exclaimed, picking up a watercolor drawing of a youthful evening frock. "What a clever idea that is." She pointed to the unusual line of the décolletage. "Are these all your own designs?"

"Why, yes!"

"They're very attractive," Miss Carolle declared as she laid them on her crowded desk. "And you say you won the Lorne prize?"

"Yes, I guess I was rather lucky, for Miss Cranston has some very clever students."

"Then you went to Merrywood Hall in North Carolina?"

"Yes, I've been there for three years."

"I think your work is very good!" was Miss Carolle's verdict. "Then you feel Madame Lizette might be interested in it?"

THE door opened and Madame Lizette came in. "Have you got that young man from the paper is here. He is going to see about that write-up I wanted. Quick, let me have it."

"It isn't ready. Besides, Madame—"

"Oh, dear, are you going crazy too? Am I to have no help from you? Tch! So, what is this?" and she pounced on Gail's designs.

"Some sketches I've been looking at. I don't believe you need to look any further for a designer. I think you can use this girl. She has some very clever ideas."

"So?" Madame Gail gave an appraising stare, as though not by the flicker of an eyelid could her victim learn what impression her work had made.

had made all her arrangements for her to stay there.

What a lot of people her old teacher seemed to know! Important people, too!

How strange it seemed to be walking down the Avenue and never seeing a person she knew. Stranger still not to talk to any one! Gail smiled as she thought of her roommate. How Rosemary Searles and she used to chatter, especially during the last term when Lucille Travers and her set had practically ostracized her. Gail's eyes grew dark as she thought of Lucille. Ever since Lucille had learned that Gail was penniless, she'd had no use for her, had informed her that a school like Miss Cranston's was no place for her. She had even tried to turn Rosemary against her!

GAIL shrugged her shoulders. She'd be homesick for Merrywood Hall and her old friends if she didn't stop thinking about them. Passing an attractive-looking tearoom, she suddenly decided to have some ice cream. She could at least speak to the waitress when she gave her order! She must speak to someone or die of loneliness right on the avenue!

The tearoom was crowded, but at last she found a small table for two. A woman of uncertain age was seated at one side, and as Gail settled herself and started to read the menu, the woman lit a cigarette.

"Hope you don't mind my smoking," she said, in rather manish tones, as Gail raised her eyes from the menu.

"Not at all," said Gail, while she turned to the waitress and gave her order. Suddenly she realized how long it had been since she had eaten.

The talking and laughter at the tables around her fascinated Gail. The wave of homesickness passed as she felt herself caught up in the bright atmosphere of the place. New worlds to conquer lay before her, and as her eyes roved from table to table she felt that in this new life to which she had committed herself all sorts of interesting things might happen.

"Are you interested in art?" boomed the woman across the table, for Gail had taken a small sketch pad from her handbag and was making a tiny drawing of a clever piece of neckwear she had just observed.

Gail smiled her assent. She did not feel particularly attracted to the woman.

"Well, if you haven't already seen the exhibit of modern paintings in the Ferrera Gallery, it might repay you to take a look around. But there, I don't suppose you'll take the advice of a woman to whom you haven't been formally introduced." She rose quickly, and stalked from the tearoom.

Gail watched her go, a puzzled look in her eyes. Then, lightly, the waitress moved to her side. "Guess you don't know her. She's a frightfully rich woman, but terribly queer. She means all right, though. Always gives wonderful tips!"

and the way Madame repeated the name made her feel that it brought to mind some distasteful memory.

Undoubtedly Madame was a temperamental person. Maybe working with her would be hard; but Derek Hargreaves had advised Gail to take anything she could get at first, so that she might get experience.

She smiled as she remembered how earnestly he had talked of her chances of getting a job. Luck, he had said, often played a big part in landing one. She'd never thought of that before. If one had ability, and perhaps experience, surely one should easily get a start. Perhaps Derek was right—she'd surely had a lucky break when she stepped into Madame Lizette's.

Still, if Gail could have stepped into Madame's office an hour later and heard her talking to a friend about the newest addition to her staff, she might have had more confidence in her ability and realized that, from Madame's viewpoint, it paid her to belittle the work of her helpers.

Slowly Gail sauntered on, looking at the windows, getting new ideas from the models she saw displayed or from some passerby, for always Gail's eyes were aware of style. It was still early. She did not want to go back yet to her room in the young professional women's clubhouse. It was a lovely place. Miss Cranston had made all her arrangements for her to stay there.

What a lot of people her old teacher seemed to know! Important people, too!

Woodland Fires Causes Erosion

Unburned Areas Best Methods Found to Hold Soil in Place

Help stop forest fires if you would stop erosion, says C. B. Webster, Regional Forester of the Soil Conservation Service. Woods fires destroy humus, duff, litter, young trees and shrubs. Woods fires injure the larger trees that are valuable for home use or commercial purposes.

Woodlands can retard erosion only when those materials that fire destroys are left on the ground and in the soil.

Burned forest and grass land have no humus, no litter, too little cover and consequently have small chance of escaping washing and gully.

Unburned woodland and unburned grass lands are the two best and most economical methods yet found to hold soil in place, conserve moisture, reduce flood damage and increase underground water supplies, according to Mr. Webster. The farmer who would practice soil conservation and help prevent erosion, must by all means help to prevent forest fires.

No whisky was made by any of the distilleries in the Scottish combine during 1932.

Girls of Assam do all the proposing. After the marriage, the husband must live with his wife's people.

Hospitality

My path is clean with sweeping,
The gate is open wide,
(Who knows who may be passing
This way at eventide?)
I've lit my hearth's bright candle—
Its beams shine far and clear
To tell one who may need them
That rest and warmth are here.
I've baked the bread of friendship
(For one may dine thereon),
And poured in crystal goblets
The rare sweet wine of love,
And though we may not know him,
I've heard it from the wise,
That often, very often,
Comes Christ in a stranger's guise.

Mrs. Mary Crockett Dies Late Thursday

Was an Aunt of Talbot Field of Hope—Succumbs at Gould, Ark.

LITTLE ROCK.—Mrs. Mary Field Crockett, 76, widow of a grandson of Davy Crockett, renowned Texan and hero of the Alamo, died at her home in Gould, Lincoln county, late Thursday.

She was an aunt of Talbot Field of Hope.

She moved to Gould about a year ago after having lived in Little Rock most of her life.

She was born in the old Field home at Ninth and Cumberland streets in 1860 and was married to John David Crockett there in 1883.

Mrs. Crockett was a lifelong member of the Episcopal church and she taught Sunday school classes for 53 years. She was a member of the Bishop of Winchester and Social Service units of the Trinity cathedral Women's Auxiliary, and a former president of the Arkansas Pioneers Society and a member of the Little Rock Chapter, D. A. R.

After moving to Gould about a year ago from Little Rock, she returned here often to attend meetings of various organizations to which she belonged.

Hollywood

By Paul Harrison

HOLLYWOOD.—So Tammany Young is dead. Well, he had been everything, he made a good exit. Dying at the time he did, only a little past the peak of his fame, Tammany will remain a legend.

He was like that—an opportunist. In fact, Tammany was a gate crusher. One-eyed Connolly may have crashed more gates, but Tammany crashed better ones. He liked uppity social affairs, daggly first nights, and luxurious travel. He was a rolling stone that had gathered a high polish.

He was a bit disappointed in Hollywood, which offered scarcely any challenge to his talents. Trouble was that he came here as an actor. Being an actor, he had very little to do. He was invited to parties, and could stroll unchallenged through the gates of his home studio.

Sometimes, just to keep in practice, he'd crash the gates of other studios. But that wasn't much fun.

He was an intimate of W. C. Fields, and appeared in a couple of Fields' pictures during the 10 months or so that he was in Hollywood. Tammany always said that he qualified as an actor because he worked three months at pulling hooks for a circus. He also had walk-on parts in some Belasco and Dillingham shows.

Name a Sesame
Manhattan was his birthplace, and Tammany actually was his name. It was a good name to mention when he wanted to get through a New York police line, and usually would get him clear up of the speakers' table at public dinners.

When Lindbergh was received at City Hall, Young bluffed and blustered his way through five cordons of cops, edged his way to the left hand of Jimmy Walker, and had a few congratulatory words for the daring young flyer. When he left City Hall, he carried a great sheaf of tickets to the evening reception, and gave a pair to every policeman who had allowed him to pass.

How He Did It
Tammany had a thirst for culture, and often was to be seen among the first-nighters at the opera and the better plays. When at the Met, he sat in the Golden Horseshoe—after the first act, anyway. He would come hatless into the lobby, snatch a program somewhere, and would engage the first patron he met in profound discussion of the performance.

If a sporting event were really distinguished, Tammany might decide to attend it. When Notre Dame played in New York, he slipped into Knute Rockne's hotel room and announced that he had arranged transportation for the team. Rockne said all right, so Young hailed a fleet of taxis (after first arranging for a commission from the company).

Then he returned and attached himself to Rockne, saw the game, and, at dinner that evening, became the recipient of a life pass to any football contest played by Notre Dame.

Guide to Royalty
Mr. Young decided to go to the polo matches at Meadowbrook when Edward, then the visiting Prince of Wales, was guest of honor. So he hopped in the car and said he had been commissioned to guide the party to the field.

Tammany may have been in party then, but the future king and bodyguard decided he looked all right. Indeed, they got along famously, and Tammany later received a little gift of 6000 banquet-size cigars. These, of course, he sold.

On two occasions, when his doctor or his wanderlust prescribed a sea voyage, Tammany went to Europe. He embarked on the maiden voyage of the Leviathan with a dollar in his pocket and nary an ounce of luggage. But he occupied a de luxe stateroom, borrowed some evening clothes from a steward, and had dinner with wine each evening.

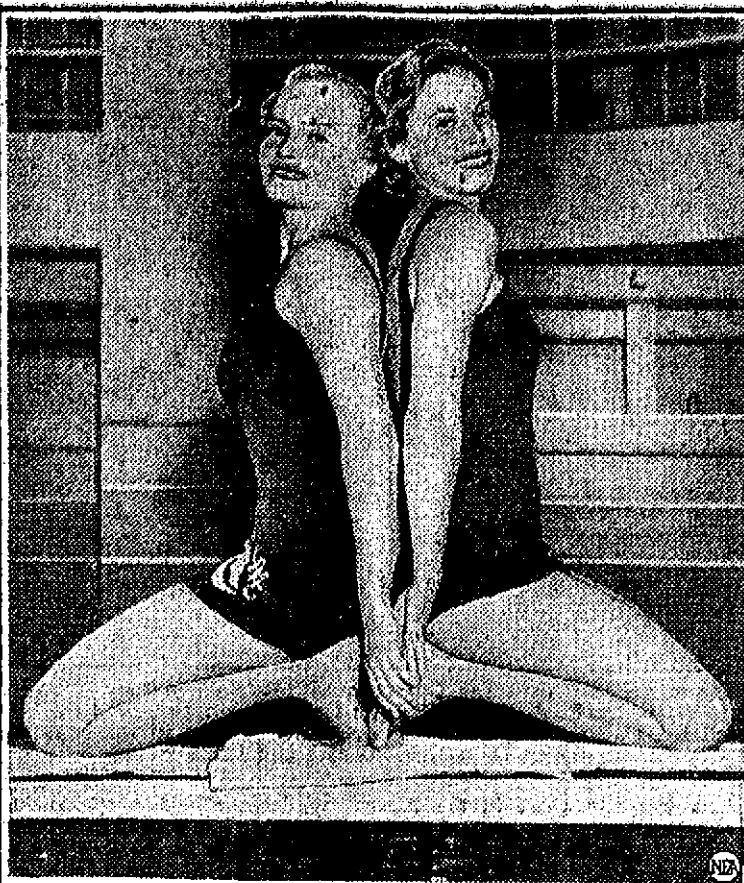

Last Days of Astor
Such exploits proved a considerable practical ability as an actor, so he was invited to some Hollywood. He came.

I was talking to him only the other day on the Paramount lot, and he was as florid and genial and natty clad as ever. But not very happy. He wanted to talk of the old times.

On the last day of the shooting of "Poppy," Young nodded sorrowfully in the direction of the ailing Fields. "Poor old Bill," he said. "Looks mighty bad."

Next day Fields was better and Tammany was dead. There are a lot of people who will bet that Tammany had no trouble grasping the gates up yonder.

Building for the Future
Text: Luke 24:45-47; 21:1-9, 34-36

Why, in spite of all the religion in the world and in spite of successive generations of Christian teaching and profession, is the world still so far from the goal of righteousness and truth?

Our lesson suggests the answer. Here in the environment of His time, among a very religious people, Jesus found a very unsatisfactory condition. He saw the conventional representatives of religion concerned more about outward profession and show than about inward grace and reality.

He beheld the scribes desiring to walk in long robes, loving salutations in the market place, seeking the chief seats in synagogues and the foremost places at feasts.

These things would have been bad enough, but in spite of all this show, how little religion they had! While they made their long prayers and pretensions of religion, they actually were defrauding widows of their houses and possessions.

Along with these scribes and leaders of religion were the people richly endowed who had made no consecration of their lives or possessions at all in proportion to their wealth. In temple and synagogue they gave gifts that cost them very little. When Jesus observed how small was their sacrifice, considering their wealth, He commended in contrast the poor widow who had given very little in quantity, but very much in actuality, because it was almost all that she had.

When Jesus saw these things, with the keenness of His judgment and His prophetic eye, He knew what would happen to such a church and society. Only destruction could follow upon scenes like that, and even the great temple, He predicted, would be cast down, stone from stone.

When they asked Him when these things would be, He declined to set any time. It is quite possible that He was not speaking from exact knowledge of the future, but that He was predicting this destruction as the sheer outworking of the laws of God in the presence of the forces destroying the life of the people.

"Where there is no vision," said the prophet of old, "the people perish." That always has been true. There is only one foundation upon which there can be permanent building, and that is the foundation of honesty and truth.

A building could not stand that was not built with square and plumb line, and no more can a society stand, either in church or in state, that was not built in uprightness.

Surely we need to drive these things home to our own age. The things that Jesus emphasized concerning His own time have been more than fulfilled, and every age has exemplified the truth of His prophecies.

Th word of Jesus to this age is a word of warning, a word of exhortation. It is a demand for reality in the soul, and for truth in all outward expression of life in word and in deed.

Announce Schedule of National Guard Camps

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—The various units of the Arkansas National Guard will start July 5 and continue until August 23. The schedule follows: The 1st Infantry and state staff, July 28 to August 11. The 26th coast artillery and the 14th observation squadron at Camp Tule, Palacios, Texas, August 13 to August 23.

BARBS

When Ali Baba suddenly became a champion, the sports world learned it knew nothing about him. Except, of course, the fact that he might have slugged with 40 taxi drivers. The suggestion of a California official to tag autos of drunk drivers with the initials, "D. D.", may meet with the disfavor of doctors of divinity. Mother's Day—that day when sons and daughters gather to honor her in so joyful and touching a reunion, that it takes her a week to clean up the dishes.

Greenland old age revolving pension organization will hold its convention in July. Probably officials are already working on the revolving platform.

Chamber of commerce spokesmen demand a return to "sanity in government." And they don't mean San Francisco.

As Keyes Quadruplets Visited Quins at Callander Nursery

The quadruplet Keyes Sisters of Texas joined in the world's delighted amazement over the Dionne quintuplets when they visited the babies at the nursery in Callander, Ont., during their trip to Canada to invite Dr. R. A. Dufoe, the quins' physician, to attend the Texas Centennial celebration. And as preparation for his visit, they initiated Dr. Dufoe to the sombrero and serape worn in the southwest. Pictured outside the quins' nursery are, left to right Mary and Mona Keyes, Dr. Dufoe, Roberta and Leola Keyes.

WITH THE LADIES

By Helen Welshimer
A woman's love is supposed to be a sturdy perennial which can stand all things—a hardy plant that never loses a leaf though it is uprooted time after time and asked to flower in alien soil. A woman—so the men say—should never let her love wither, no matter whom her husband sees, what he does, where he goes.

But what if he goes up a tree, erects a platform, and decides to live in a nest among the branches? Should she climb up, tearing her best silk stockings, scratching her face and hands, and sit in the middle of the platform, praying the wind won't blow too hard? Should she stay in her house hoping that her husband will come down to earth again some day?

Or should she let him leap from branch to branch, communing with his feathered playmates, and find a house with a door to which he doesn't hold the key?

Marriage Up a Tree
That is the problem that confronted Mrs. C. Melken Arslanian for a long time—eight years, to be exact. The day after she was married her husband went off on a honeymoon, alone. She overlooked that when he came back and rented an apartment but when he established himself in a tent on its roof, she began to have her doubts. Just the same, she went up to the roof to see how he was faring, from time to time. After that he built a platform in a tree on an empty lot and stayed there for a while. Now he is perching in a tree somewhere in the Orange mountains. Mrs. Arslanian has decided that she has had enough. She asked for a divorce the other day and received it. Living in trees is too much to ask of any woman. Garrets, covered wagons, hay stacks, yes, if the case demands it. But not among the branches! If a man wants to make a monkey out of himself let him do it alone.

Honesty Aids Mutual Adjustment.
If people would be honest with each other in stating their likes and dislikes, preferences and habits, before marriage, there would be fewer wedding licenses issued, but the people who signed their names to them would have a good chance at marital happiness. Psychologists say that it often is possible to foretell before marriage whether or not the man and woman will "cleave to each other so long as they both shall live." People whose roots go deeply into the same soil will build a lasting structure. Those who come from different soils, necessitating the transplanting of one, haven't so much of a chance.

Tree vs. Bungalow
Mr. Arslanian, who is an Armenian rug-dealer, should have made a speech something like this: "I earn my living putting rugs on people's floors, my darling, but the inside of a house irks me. I want the great outdoors. I want to live in a tree! I like to go bathing in midwinter and I like to hike in the snow in nothing but a pair of shorts. If you want to marry me, I'll build a bigger platform in my tree and help you up."

Mrs. Arslanian should have shaken her head and told him she wanted a bungalow with a fireplace and garden. Each would have been happier and much time and energy saved.

Reform Comes from Within
Few men are ever reformed because of a woman. They may change but it is because something within themselves promotes the transformation. If a man likes to sit on a platform, and feel a kink with the bumblebees and the red-headed woodpeckers, and laugh at people who sweep their rugs, don't count on him for the spring house-cleaning. He won't be much of a help. He never will come down to earth, and a sensible woman had better realize that she is happiest when her feet are planted firmly in the nice green grass.

INDIANAPOLIS — That imaginary "groove" on the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, hunted high and low by racing stars for 25 years, has been relegated to the scrap heap.

The track's all "groove" now. This is the finding of A. O. Hastings, former member of the Indiana State Highway Commission and the expert under whose direction the oval has been remodeled to provide for increased speed on May 30 and in the future.

Winners of the 500-mile race, from Ray Harroun in 1911 to Kelly Petillo in 1935, all attributed their victory in some part to their own secret discovery of the "groove" into which the

Very much in the swim these days, with their second birthday only a week distant, the Dionne quintuplets here give you their version of the nursery rhyme, "Rub-a-dub-dub! Five quins in a tub!" ## STORIES IN STAMPS

By I. S. Klein

FIRST MOTORIST

BEHIND locked doors of a shack in a suburb of Stuttgart, Germany, some 50 years ago, two young men secretly worked on a mechanical contrivance that aroused the suspicion of neighbors. They called police, and the doors were battered in.

Instead of finding a counterfeiting plant, the police discovered the first attempt at a successful automobile engine. It was the invention of Gottlieb Daimler, famous German engineer, who was being helped by his friend, Wilhelm Maybach.

Daimler, slave boyhood, had displayed keen interest in mechanical engineering.

In 1886, at the age of 50, he attached a motor to a bicycle and started the residents of Stuttgart with it. The same year, he exhibited his first horseless wagon—a steam-driven affair. And in 1887, he brought out his first gasoline-propelled automobile.

Recently, on the 50th anniversary of Daimler's original automotive invention, Germany issued a stamp in his honor. It is shown here.

No Woman Envoy for the British

But American-Born Lady Astor Makes Caustic Attack on Ban

By OSCAR LEIDING
LONDON.—(AP)—The British government wants no Ruth Bryan Owens in its foreign service.

A woman may sit on the throne, or be the head of commons or in the cabinet—but diplomatic and consular careers are to remain closed to her.

"The time has not yet arrived," the government has announced, "when women could be employed either in the consular service or in the diplomatic service with advantage to the state or with profit to the women."

This decision was announced after the question of admitting women had been surveyed by a government committee headed by Sir Claude Schuster. Well-known women were quick to express their dissent with the government's announcement.

Lady Astor Objects
American-born Lady Astor said: "The old diplomacy has failed as the chaotic state of the world testifies. The very desperation of civilization's plight should be sufficient for us to insist that these petty barriers of sex be swept away to give place to the larger and far more vital consideration of the best brains for the job, wherever they may be found."

"If most foreign countries women are admitted to these services now," said Miss Marjorie Green, secretary of the National Council for Equal Citizenship. "I am afraid we are behind the times."

Lady Snowden commented: "I see no reason why all women should be excluded from these posts. It has not been suggested that the average woman should take up this work, but only ones eminently suited for it."

Work Too Difficult
On the very large majority of consular posts, the government announced, "women have to deal with a number of matters which it would be difficult for the average woman to handle. Women would in practice find themselves hampered and restricted. At the same time diplomatic and consular careers were closed to British women, a recruiting drive for more women police was started in London. With some 70 women in its service as police, Scotland yard began to look for more unmarried "women of character and keenness, possessing good education and sound physique." Their starting pay is approximately $13.75 a week, with allowance for lodgings extra.
